

I was recently made aware of the changes that the FCC is proposing regarding Low Power FM stations and their affect on FM translators.

I listen to K-Love which comes to my city via a FM translator.

K-Love is the only station my family and I listen to. In a society that has continually slipping morals and values, I find K-Love's positive and encouraging message an extremely important part of my family's day. I rest easy knowing that my children can listen to

K-Love anytime without me worrying about the language or message in the music. K-Love is an indescribable asset to every city and person it touches. Over 8,000 people comit their lives to Christ as a result of K-Love being there when they need them. K-Love's pastoral staff have stopped many suicidal people from harming themselves by telling them of God's love and the hope they have in him. K-Love provides guidance to the homeless, those out of work, single parents, and others who feel they have no where else to turn.

K-Love is instrumental is assisting with christian based fundraisers, which in turn impact hundreds who receive the fruits of these fundraisers. What programming could possibly have that kind of impact on the communities that receive K-Love's FM translator signal. Replacing K-Love's FM translators with Low Power FM stations would be a devistating blow to the humanitarian impact that K-Love has on the United States. Do you listen to K-Love? If you did then there would be no doubt in your mind that K-Love is needed.

Thank you,

Lisa Burns
